REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION

The above-named members of the Department appeared before me on December 9, 2025. Respondents, through their respective counsel, entered pleas of Not Guilty to the subject charges. The CCRB introduced into evidence the hearsay statement of Complainant, along with video footage of the incident. Respondents called Sergeant Robert Kullak as a witness, and each Respondent testified on his own behalf. A stenographic transcript of the trial record has been prepared and is available for the Police Commissioner's review. Having evaluated all of the evidence in this matter, I find as follows: Respondent Siraco: not guilty of all charges; Respondent Nelson: not guilty of the force charges, but guilty of discourtesy. For the discourtesy count, I recommend that Respondent Nelson forfeit five vacation days.

ANALYSIS

On the evening of November 29, 2022, members of the Queens South Public Safety Team were patrolling a high-crime area in the vicinity of Jamaica Avenue and Sutphin Boulevard in Queens County. Both Respondents, along with Police Officers Robert Kullak and Michael Dunn, were in uniform inside an unmarked car. The officers made certain observations regarding an individual (hereinafter "Complainant"), which will be discussed below, and followed him inside a bodega. Respondents each are accused of using excessive force against Complainant inside the bodega as they were attempting to arrest him for possession of illegal narcotics, along with related charges.

Complainant, who has a lawsuit pending against the NYPD stemming from this incident, did not appear to testify. Instead, the CCRB introduced into evidence a recording of a telephone interview they conducted with Complainant on December 20, 2022, along with the accompanying transcript. (CCRB Exs. 11 & 11A) It is well-settled that hearsay evidence is admissible in administrative proceedings and may form the sole basis for a finding of fact. The hearsay, however, must be carefully evaluated to determine whether it is sufficiently reliable. It is preferable to have testimony from a live witness, where opposing counsel has the opportunity to cross examine, and the court can observe witness demeanor. In the absence of live testimony from Complainant here, this tribunal carefully considered his hearsay statement, in conjunction with the other evidence presented at trial, including the video footage.

In his interview, Complainant stated that he was coming from the bank and entered the bodega in order to purchase an ice cup and some water. He had seen the officers in the unmarked car “lurking around the area,” but did not pay them much attention since he was not doing anything wrong. The officers followed him inside and asked for his identification, which he provided. Complainant tried to move away but the officers stopped him and started searching through his pockets. They told him that he was being placed under arrest and slammed him on the floor, where they repeatedly punched him. According to Complainant, one of the officers, who was short and had blonde hair, struck him with an unknown weapon, breaking his nose and orbital bone. Complainant described himself as “under the influence” at the time of the incident, admitting that he had been smoking weed. He denied the charges in the criminal complaint which alleged that he possessed narcotics. (CCRB Ex. 11A at 6-10, 16, 21-22, 30-33)

No medical records for Complainant were produced at trial. However, the TRI reports in evidence (CCRB Ex. 12) indicate that Complainant was diagnosed by a doctor at Queens General Hospital with a “fractured right orbital bone.” The TRI also states that Complainant was arrested for Criminal Possession of a Controlled Substance in the Second Degree, a class A-II felony.

Body-Worn Camera (“BWC”) footage from police officers at the scene was admitted into evidence as follows: Respondent Nelson (CCRB Ex. 1), Officer Dunn (CCRB Ex. 2), Respondent Siraco (CCRB Ex. 3), Officer Kullak (CCRB Ex. 4), Officer Minichini (CCRB Ex. 5), and Officer Jainaraine (CCRB Ex. 6). Additionally, there was video footage from inside the bodega (CCRB Exs. 7 & 8) as well as outside the store (CCRB Ex. 9). A multi-camera exhibit prepared by the CCRB shows footage from the cameras inside the bodega along with Officer Kullak’s BWC footage side-by-side. (CCRB Ex. 10) Relevant portions of the videos will be referenced below.

In addition to the trial testimony of both Respondents, Sergeant Robert Kullak, who was in the rank of police officer on the date of the incident, also testified. All three police witnesses were essentially consistent regarding their observations of Complainant outside the bodega before they followed him inside. In an area “run rampant with drug dealers,” the officers witnessed Complainant being approached by another individual, where they engaged in a brief conversation. From their experience, the officers believed the other individual to be a drug user about to purchase narcotics from Complainant. They reached this conclusion based on the location, the individual’s “disheveled, hunched over” appearance, and also from their observation that the individual was holding money, which dropped from his hand and “fluttered” to the ground. The individual picked up the money, but before anything further could happen Complainant looked toward the officers inside their unmarked police vehicle, and promptly shooed the other individual away, shouting at him to “leave me alone.” Complainant, who was standing outside a bar holding a clear cup containing a brown liquid, walked away and entered the bodega. The officers suspected that Complainant had been in the process of engaging in a hand-to-hand drug sale, but when he observed the police presence, he aborted his plan and walked away. (Tr. 34-37, 51, 70, 80-83, 111-13, 120-21)

At trial, the officers acknowledged they did not, at that point, possess reasonable suspicion in order to conduct a Level 3 stop of Complainant: they did not actually witness a drug transaction, and could not initially determine whether there was alcohol inside the cup. Nevertheless, they did follow Complainant inside in order to investigate further, and to make sure Complainant was okay after shouting at the other individual to leave him alone. Once inside, the officers could smell alcohol in the cup (Resp. Ex. B, photograph of cup) and on his breath, which provided a basis to issue a summons, and Officer Dunn asked Complainant for identification. As Complainant reached inside his fanny pack to get the identification, he momentarily “bladed” his body away from the officers, then handed over his ID. Before they had a chance to check the identification for warrants, Officer Kullak, who was standing to Complainant’s right, observed a plastic bag inside Complainant’s sweatshirt pocket that appeared to contain narcotics; specifically, through an opening of the bag he saw glassine envelopes and pill bottles. (Resp. Ex. A, photographs of narcotics) Officer Kullak alerted his colleagues to his observation by stating, “220,” the Penal Law section for possession of a controlled substance. (Tr. 38-40, 51-56, 66, 71-73, 81-83, 114-15, 122-27)

Sergeant Kullak testified that when he grabbed Complainant's hand in order to arrest him, Complainant, in turn, grabbed and squeezed his hand, injuring his thumb. (CCRB Ex. 4 at 0:40) A struggle ensued between Complainant and all four officers, during which Complainant moved toward the door of the bodega as he continued to resist their efforts to place him in handcuffs by tensing his body and refusing to give them his hands. According to Sergeant Kullak, the officers were able to bring Complainant down to the floor, where he continued to struggle, kicking with his legs, before they eventually were able to place him in handcuffs. During the course of the tussle, some of the narcotics Complainant possessed fell to the floor. Sergeant Kullak admitted that after Complainant was in handcuffs, he punched Complainant in the stomach because he was frustrated at the injury Complainant caused to his thumb, which later required surgery to repair ligament damage. (CCRB Ex. 5 at 1:35) Sergeant Kullak also faced disciplinary charges in connection with this incident, which he resolved with a Schedule "A" Command Discipline. (Tr. 41-46, 51, 56-60, 65-67)

Respondent Siraco testified that upon entering the bodega, the three officers with him approached Complainant, and informed the sergeant that there was alcohol in Complainant's cup. The officers retrieved Complainant's identification and handed it to Respondent Siraco, who was intending to check it for warrants. As he was doing so, Respondent Siraco observed a struggle ensue, and heard one of the officers call out, "220." Respondent Siraco put down his phone, and assisted in trying to secure Complainant's hands behind his back. Complainant resisted their efforts by tensing his body and pulling his arms away. Respondent Siraco also observed Complainant pull his right arm back, as Officer Dunn said to Complainant, "Don't swing on me." (Tr. 114-15, 126-28)

In order to gain better control of the resisting Complainant, the officers tried to bring the fight to the ground. Respondent Siraco testified that Complainant stumbled forward toward the front door of the bodega before finally being brought down. Complainant continued to refuse to give up his hands, and so Respondent Siraco delivered three hand strikes toward Complainant's mid-section, though he may have actually hit him in the legs. (CCRB Ex. 8 at 10:15)

Complainant was positioned face down with his hands underneath him. Based on the extent of Complainant's resistance, Respondent Siraco was concerned he might be reaching for a firearm, and so he punched Complainant one time in the face. (CCRB Ex. 7 at 10:25) He also threatened to tase complainant with the hope that it would convince him to comply, but Complainant continued to resist. (Tr. 115-17, 131, 135)

The officers eventually were able to handcuff Complainant behind his back, and they brought him to his feet. Even then, Complainant continued to tussle, including reaching down the rear of his pants. Respondent Siraco testified that he grabbed Complainant's chin and turned his head away from the officers to prevent him from spitting blood on them. (CCRB Ex. 7 at 13:42) He also attempted to place a COVID mask on Complainant, but the strap snapped. After the incident, Respondent Siraco went to the hospital to be treated for two partially torn ligaments in his wrist. (Tr. 117-18, 136-38)

Respondent Nelson testified that once they entered the bodega, Officers Dunn and Kullak approached Complainant. After Officer Kullak called out "220," the officers attempted to place Complainant's arms behind his back in order to handcuff him. Complainant pulled away and swung at Officer Dunn. All four officers grappled with Complainant in order to gain control, as Complainant resisted by flailing around and refusing to be handcuffed. Complainant carried the officers toward the front door, where he was taken down. Narcotics, including glassines and pill bottles, fell to the floor from the bag inside his sweatshirt. While on the floor, Complainant was laying on his hand and reaching into his pants. Although he did not observe a bulge, based on how hard Complainant was fighting with the officers, Respondent Nelson, from his experience, was concerned he might be reaching for a firearm. Respondent Nelson acknowledged that he punched Complainant four or five times in his face and shoulder area during the struggle on the floor, since Complainant refused to comply with their orders to give them his arms. (CCRB Ex. 8 at 10:12; Tr. 73-78, 87-96)

Even after he was placed in handcuffs and brought to his feet, Complainant continued to struggle with the officers. He kept turning his body and refused their efforts to bring him out of the bodega to the police vehicle. Respondent Nelson testified that he grabbed Complainant by the hood of his sweatshirt in order to move him toward the exit. (CCRB Ex. 7 at 13:30) He did not believe he grabbed Complainant's hair as alleged, and if he did touch Complainant's hair it was inadvertent as he was grabbing the hood of the sweatshirt. (Tr. 73, 99-102)

Following the arrest, Respondent Nelson and Officer Dunn escorted Complainant to an RMP. (CCRB Ex. 6 at 1:34) Respondent Nelson did not recall telling Complainant, "I'm gonna fuck you up, and then you'll be dead." After reviewing the BWC video (CCRB Ex. 6 at 1:42), Respondent Nelson confirmed hearing the words "you'll be dead" being spoken, though he still could not recall who made that statement. According to Respondent Nelson, after Complainant was placed inside the RMP, officers recovered additional narcotics, which Complainant had discarded in the back of the vehicle. (Tr. 75-76, 79, 103-08)

The main charge against each Respondent accuses them of wrongfully punching Complainant, causing him to suffer a fractured orbital socket. Specification 1 against Respondent Nelson alleges that he wrongfully used force by delivering multiple hand strikes to the right side of Complainant's face, while Specification 2 against Respondent Siraco charges him with wrongfully delivering multiple hand strikes to Complainant's legs, as well as one to his face. Section 221-02 of the Patrol Guide states that force may be used when it is reasonable to ensure the safety of a member of the service, or when it is reasonable to place a person in custody or to prevent escape. "Any application or use of force must be reasonable under the circumstances." The CCRB argues that the force used here was excessive, while Respondents contend that their use of hand strikes in order to gain control of an actively resisting suspect was reasonable.

As noted above, Complainant did not appear at trial, and the CCRB instead offered into evidence his hearsay statement. On the one hand, the record has established that Complainant did sustain an injury to his right eye during the encounter with the police. However, Complainant, who has a pending lawsuit against the Department, was not a reliable narrator regarding the events leading up to that injury. He claimed, for instance, that a shorter officer with blonde hair struck him with an object and fractured his orbital bone; that description most closely resembles Officer Kullak, though from the video footage it does not appear that Officer Kulak caused the eye injury, nor do the videos show Complainant being struck by any object or weapon. Complainant also insisted that he did not possess any narcotics, but that denial was convincingly contradicted by the evidence of the drugs observed in his possession and recovered by the police, both inside the bodega and from the RMP afterward. The reasonable view of the evidence is that Complainant was aware that his possession of narcotics would lead to significant felony arrest charges, which fueled his violent resistance to the officers' efforts to take him into custody.

In contrast, both Respondents testified in a detailed, logical manner about the altercation inside the bodega, in a manner that was consistent with the video evidence. When their colleague indicated that Complainant was in possession of narcotics, they reasonably relied upon that information and attempted to place Complainant under arrest. Although there were four officers involved in that effort, the video footage confirms that Complainant actively resisted their attempts to secure him in handcuffs, causing injuries to the officers in the process. During the struggle he pulled the officers toward the exit of the bodega, further raising concerns that he was trying to escape. Even when they were down on the floor, Complainant continued to resist the officers' efforts to secure his arms behind his back for the purpose of placing him in handcuffs. Complainant was face down with his arms under him. Although Respondents did not witness a bulge on his person, the manner in which Complainant placed his hands underneath him, combined with the intensity of his resistance, raised additional concerns that he could be reaching for a weapon, bringing even greater urgency to the need to secure Complainant in handcuffs.

It was in this context that the Respondents delivered the hand strikes at issue, in order to gain compliance. They did so only after Complainant ignored repeated verbal commands to stop resisting and to get on the ground. It took the officers approximately 20 seconds to bring Complainant to the floor, and an additional two minutes to place him in handcuffs. Under these specific circumstances, the amount of force used was proportional to the situation with which they were dealing. The record has failed to establish, by a preponderance of the credible evidence, that the actions of Respondents were unreasonable. Accordingly, I find Respondent Siraco Not Guilty of Specification 2, and Respondent Nelson Not Guilty of Specification 1.

The remaining charges against each Respondent will be considered separately.

Specification 1 against Respondent Siraco charges him with wrongfully stopping Complainant. The CCRB argues that Respondent Siraco, the ranking officer at the scene, did not possess the reasonable suspicion necessary to conduct a Level 3 stop of Complainant. Indeed, as noted above, the officers each acknowledged that initially they did not have a basis for such a stop, since they did not witness a drug transaction and did not yet know the contents of the cup being held by Complainant.

However, this accusation ignores the manner in which events unfolded once the officers entered the bodega. Upon entry, they did not immediately conduct a Level 3 stop. Rather, the officers merely approached Complainant to investigate. The video footage captures Complainant holding the cup with liquid in it (CCRB Ex. 8 at 8:10), and I credit the testimony of Respondent Siraco and his colleagues that they smelled alcohol inside the cup, which was a summonsable offense that permitted them to ask for identification. As this was happening, Officer Kullak informed his colleagues that he had observed narcotics inside Complainant's sweatshirt pocket, which precipitated the arrest.

Under these specific circumstances, the record does not support a finding that Respondent Siraco conducted a wrongful stop of Complainant. Accordingly, I find Respondent Siraco Not Guilty of Specification 1.

Specification 3 charges Respondent Siraco with wrongful use of force in that he held and restrained Complainant's head for several seconds while Complainant was handcuffed. It is undisputed that Respondent Siraco did grab Complainant's chin and hold his head away from the officers: Respondent acknowledged that he did so, and it was captured by the store's video camera. (CCRB Ex. 7 at 13:42) At issue is whether, under the circumstances, it was unreasonable for him to do so.

The CCRB argues that Respondent's actions toward Complainant, who was handcuffed at the time, constituted an unreasonable use of force. However, the record does not support such a conclusion. This was not a situation where Respondent Siraco gratuitously grabbed Complainant's chin for no reason. Rather, I credit Respondent Siraco's testimony that the reason he did so was to prevent Complainant from spitting blood on the officers. This occurred immediately after a violent struggle with Complainant, who actively resisted the efforts of the officers to take him into custody. Even after he was placed in handcuffs, Complainant continued to tussle with the officers, and he appeared in the video footage to spit at them. (CCRB Ex. 7 at 13:41) Under these specific circumstances, Respondent's actions did not constitute wrongful use of force. Accordingly, I find Respondent Siraco Not Guilty of Specification 3.

Specification 2 charges Respondent Nelson with wrongful use of force in that he pulled Complainant's hair while he was handcuffed. Section 221-01(2) states that members of the service shall not use any level of force on handcuffed subjects unless necessary to prevent injury, escape, or to overcome active physical resistance or assault. The CCRB contends that it was unreasonable for Respondent Nelson to pull the hair of Complainant after he was already on his feet and in handcuffs.

Respondent Nelson, in contrast, argues that he did not pull Complainant by the hair, and whatever force he used was justified. He credibly testified that even after Complainant was placed in handcuffs and brought to his feet, he continued to struggle with the officers, refusing their efforts to move him outside the store to the police vehicle. It was in this context that Respondent Nelson then grabbed him by the hood of his sweatshirt.

The video footage supports Respondent Nelson's contention that he was grabbing Complainant by the hood of his sweatshirt, and was not pulling on his hair, which was short.

Although Complainant could be heard saying, “Get off my hair,” (CCRB Ex. 5 at 2:01), and Respondent Nelson may have briefly touched his hair when he reached toward him, what he grabbed and pulled was the hood of the sweatshirt, which was reasonable under the circumstances. (CCRB Ex. 7 at 13:30-13:34) Any contact with Complainant’s hair was incidental. The record has not established, by a preponderance of the credible evidence, that Respondent Nelson forcefully pulled Complainant’s hair as alleged. Accordingly, I find him Not Guilty of Specification 2

Specification 3 against Respondent Nelson charges him with making a discourteous comment to Complainant, stating, “I’m going to fuck you up, and then you’ll be dead.” The alleged remark is captured on the BWC footage of Officer Jainaraine (CCRB Ex. 6, slowed-down version Ex. 6A) In that footage, Respondent Nelson and Officer Dunn can be seen escorting Complainant, who is in handcuffs, to the RMP. Complainant states, “All this right here, what you all just did...” Officer Dunn, on his left, interjects, “All this what/that you did...” Complainant responds, “No, no, no, no. You’re a fuckin’ liar.” Respondent Nelson, standing to the right of Complainant, asks him, “Who you talking to?” and Complainant answers, “Talking to you.” Respondent Nelson then states to Complainant, “I’m gonna fuck you up, and then you’ll be dead.” (CCRB Ex. 6 at 1:34)

At trial, Respondent Nelson testified that he did not recall making that statement to Complainant. Even after reviewing the video footage, he maintained he does not believe he made that comment.

After carefully reviewing the evidence, including the video footage played at different speeds, it does appear that Respondent Nelson made the comment in question to Complainant. That remark was gratuitous, serving no legitimate law enforcement purpose. Even if Respondent

Nelson was frustrated with Complainant's behavior, including his violent, active resistance inside the bodega, that did not justify the discourteous comment that was made. Accordingly, I find Respondent Nelson Guilty of Specification 3.

PENALTY

In order to determine an appropriate penalty, this tribunal, guided by the Department's Disciplinary System Penalty Guidelines, considered all relevant facts and circumstances, including potential aggravating and mitigating factors established in the record. Respondent Nelson's employment history also was examined. See 38 RCNY § 15-07. Information from his personnel record that was considered in making this penalty recommendation is contained in an attached memorandum.

Respondent Nelson, who was appointed to the Department on January 7, 2015, has been found Guilty of making a discourteous remark to Complainant. After Complainant was placed in handcuffs, Respondent Nelson and Officer Dunn escorted him to an RMP. Words were exchanged between Complainant and the officers, and at one point Respondent Nelson stated to Complainant, "I'm going to fuck you up, and then you'll be dead."

The CCRB recommends the presumptive penalty for discourtesy, which is five days. Notwithstanding Respondent Nelson's strong record in his 10 years with the Department, during which he has been awarded one Commendation, 31 medals for Meritorious Police Duty, and six medals for Excellent Police Duty, the presumptive penalty is appropriate. At the time he made the remark, Complainant had been taken into custody, and was in the process of being placed inside the RMP. Although Complainant appeared to initiate the verbal exchange, and called one of the officers a “fuckin’ liar,” it was the responsibility of Respondent Nelson, a trained police officer, not to be baited into an exchange of insults with Complainant.

Instead, he made a threatening comment to Complainant that served no legitimate law enforcement purpose, and there needs to be appropriate accountability. Taking into account the facts and circumstances in this matter, I recommend that Respondent Nelson forfeit five (5) vacation days.

Subject: SUMMARY OF EMPLOYMENT RECORD
POLICE OFFICER BRIAN NELSON
TAX REGISTRY NO. 957895
DISCIPLINARY CASE NO. C-031297

Respondent was appointed to the Department on January 7, 2015. On his two most recent performance evaluations, he received a 4.5 rating of “Extremely Competent/Highly Competent” in 2025, and a 4.0 rating of “Highly Competent” in 2024. He has been awarded one Commendation, thirty-one medals for Meritorious Police Duty, and six medals for Excellent Police Duty.

In 2023, Respondent forfeited twenty (20) vacation days after pleading guilty to discharging his firearm at a moving vehicle.

For your consideration.
