Synopsis

§ 87(2)(b) alleged that on August 12, 1998 at 11:30PM PO Patrick Hendry and PO George Dumont laughed at him when they responded to a call at his home.

The police personnel of the 103rd Precinct in Queens forwarded § 87(2)(b) complaint. However, § 87(2)(b) hung the phone up before finishing the complaint. This investigator attempted to reach the phone number that was given to the police, but upon calling the number a series of beeps were heard on the other end of the line. Assuming that this number was a fax machine an attempt was made to send a contact letter by way of fax. However, when the number was dialed at the fax machine, the same beeping sound was heard, but the letter was not transmitted. The phone number that was listed for § 87(2)(b) address in Coles was tried, but the residents at that address never heard of § 87(2)(b). In addition every § 87(2)(b) in Queens was called with negative results. Finally, by using a Bell Atlantic feature a § 87(2)(b) was located in Queens. This name was the closest that Bell Atlantic had for § 87(2)(b). This investigator left a message on the voice mail of § 87(2)(b). Four days later a man by the name of § 87(2)(b) called stating that his brother's name was § 87(2)(b) and that § 87(2)(b) might have lived at the address listed on the complaint, but was now living in Guyana. § 87(2)(b) stated that his brother had lived in Guyana for the past year, but since he doesn't talk to his brother on a regular basis, he doesn't know for sure if § 87(2)(b) was in New York City on August 12, 1999, the date of the incident. An Internet search was done for § 87(2)(b) with negative contact results. DMV and BADS indices did not have a record relating to subject. Inasmuch, as there was no reply to the subpoena for subscriber information that was mailed, a phone call to a § 87(2)(b) who handles § 87(2)(b) subpoena request at Bell Atlantic, revealed that there was no phone number listed or unlisted for a § 87(2)(b) at the address given on the "245". It is recommended that this case be closed as complainant unavailable.
